NORRIS RELEASED; GETS SMALL FINE

Man Who Attacked Alonzo
Kiser Pleads Drunkenness
When Arraigned.

Frank Norris, railway brakeman and former resident of Mishawaka, who attacked Alonzo Kiser, manager of the Mishawaka Bottling works, Wednesday night, was arraigned before City Judge R. S. Feig Thursday, and following a plea of drunkenness, released upon payment of a fine and costs amounting to $15 and a promise to put Mishawaka behind him for good and all.

Threatening to "get" Ernest Wilke and Officer Horton Terbach and "brain them on sight," Norris made the rounds of the city's saloons Wednesday. It is alleged, told the driver Kiser was the man he was after, picked up a dray spike, and declaring he was about to smash someone's brains out, proceeded toward the bottling house manager.

"He walked steady enough," said Kiser Thursday morning when asked if the man appeared drunk, "and talked sober."

Thinking Norris joking when he told him to let the box he was lifting to a wagon alone, Kiser proceeded with his work, and Norris made a lunge with the bar. Kiser ducked and the bar crashed with killing force on the box. A second blow missed its mark, and bystanders seized Norris.

He was taken to the police station and locked up, and Chief Thomas Kreiter declared him too drunk to talk, Wednesday night when questioned by the News-Times.

Judge Feig in his examination asked Norris if he was sane, and Norris declared under ordinary circumstances, he was, but when drunk he was not responsible for his actions. Asked how many drinks he needed to cloud his brain, he said it didn't take many.

Arrested Here Before.
As to his being in the meshes of the law, Norris said he had been taken on suspicion before he left here two years ago, and that he was told the police were after him when he immigrated to Illinois.

Ordered back to Illinois and to stay away from St. Joseph county, Norris said he had to go to South Bend to follow his work as a brakeman, and the taboos limits were confined to Mishawaka where he seems to have a grudge against several people.

Norris said he didn't recognize Kiser, and that he didn't even remember coming to the jail. However, witnesses declare if drunk, he was the most sober drunk seen hereabouts for some time.

His fine was paid by a South Bend man.

Automobile Responsible.

Douglas Campbell, small son of Mr. and Mrs. D. J. Campbell, 526 Lincoln highway E., suffered a broken thigh late Wednesday when he was struck by the bumper of a new automobile driven by J. F. Hollister, 518 Lincoln highway E.

Mr. Hollister was driving a new car into his yard, and a number of youngsters, among them being the Campbell boy, had flocked about the machine. Preparing to turn around, Mr. Hollister called to the children to get out of the way, and thinking they had attained a safe distance, proceeded to turn. However, Douglas seemed interested in the automobile and did not stop at a safe distance, and Mr. Hollister used to a shorter car and occupied with the turn, did not see him until he had been jammed between the bumper and a fence.

Dr. W. E. Borley and C. A. Dresch were called and reduced the fracture.

According to the dispatch, the chauffeur of the car in which Miss McGrath was riding, turned to one side in order to pass a hay rack, and was forced to turn in again to avoid an approaching automobile.
